

Chapter 10

The Trip To The Genesee Country

In one of Hamilton's letters to Angelica after she completed her New York visit, he says:

" . . . I shall by the first direct opportunity begin a correspondence with Philip [Church]. I have serious designs upon his heart and I flatter myself I am not a bad marksman."

Philip Church entered the army as a captain of the 12th Infantry. In 1797 he was an aide to his Uncle Alexander Hamilton, who then had the title of Major General. The army had been reactivated because of fears of war with France. The only notable part of that duty seems to have been when he accompanied Hamilton to Washington's funeral in Philadelphia in December of 1799. One writer describes his job as "copying and other drudgery." Turner adds as a footnote to his account:

"He was cautioned by General Hamilton to be careful of his dealings with Washington [who had flatter myself I am not a bad marksman."

I have

Philip Church entered the army as a captain of the 12th Infantry. In 1797 he was an aide to his Uncle Alexander Hamilton, who then had the title of Major General. The army had been reactivated because of fears of war with France. The only notable part of that duty seems to have been when he accompanied Hamilton to Washington's funeral in Philadelphia in December of 1799. One writer describes his job as "copying and other drudgery." Turner adds as a footnote to his account:

"He was cautioned by General Hamilton to be punctual in his dealings with Washington [who had just then left office. It was actually Adams whom Hamilton had asked to appoint him; Washington was to have served as head of the army, had war come] if he wished to gain his esteem [a matter which Hamilton had cause to remember, of course, since it led to his own youthful break with Washington]. When application was made for a commission for him in the army, Washington first objected that he was too young; but observing that he remembered the promptness and punctuality of the young man, granted the commission."

In 1798 Washington had written a letter to Philip Schuyler, Church's grandfather, quoted in Godchild of Washington, in which he expresses regret that the Schuylers were unable to visit the Washingtons at Mount Vernon and says:

"Your grandson, Mr. Church has all the exterior of a fine young man, and from what I have heard of his intellect and principles will do justice to, and reward the precepts he has received from yourself, his parents and Uncle Hamilton. So far then, as my attention to him will go consistant with my other duties he may assuredly count on."

Philip then acted for a while as Hamilton's private secretary through the year 1800. In that year he had acted as second to James Wadsworth in his duel with Oliver Kane. Later on his chief weapon with adversaries was the court. Young Church had started the study of law at Middle Temple in London and while there had listened to debates in Parli-draw the use of the Philip Hamilton. E that he thought "it of young Hamilton's still."

However, Church refuse to lend h once more in the

The death had written:

"ph flatter: dear si such p had such a centered i the youth Three yea Burr in to, and reward the precepts he has received from yourself, his parents and Uncle Hamilton. So far then, as my attention to him will go consistent with my other duties he may assuredly count on."

Philip then acted for a while as Hamilton's private secretary through the year 1800. In that year he had acted as second to James Wadsworth in his duel with Oliver Kane.
Later on his chief weapon with adversaries was the cane.
Young Church had started the study of law at Middle Temple in London and while there had listened to debates in Parliament. The Allegany County History says that there "he enjoyed all the advantages rising from constant association with nobility and gentry of that day," a statement perhaps more ambiguous than its writer intended! He had resumed his law studies in the office of Nathaniel Pendleton, Esquire (later to be Hamilton's second in his duel with Burr) and was admitted to the bar on July 14, 1804--possibly feeling as an admirer of the French Revolution that with that he had stormed his own personal Bastille.

In 1801 Philip Church acted as a second to his cousin
Philip Hamilton in the duel which (using Church's pistols)
cost Philip Hamilton his life.

Philip Hamilton, with a friend at the theatre, insulted an enemy of his fathers, a man named George Eacker, and once

The death
had written:

"Philip inherits his flattering prospects for a dear sister, very happy such promise in a son."

had such a marked effect on centered in this son, that the youthful quality that Three years later Hamilton
Burr in the same spot, usi

By then Philip Church the Genesee that had been come there as agent for to become the town of became the builder of

The road that be-and figuratively be-

Until the trip
seems, for all we d
this trip he begin

Turner descr life soon after

with nobility and gentry of ... more ambiguous than its writer intended! He had resumed his law studies in the office of Nathaniel Pendleton, Esquire (later to be Hamilton's second in his duel with Burr) and was admitted to the bar on July 14, 1804--possibly feeling
as an admirer of the French Revolution that with that he had stormed his own personal Bastille.

In 1801 Philip Church acted as a second to his cousin
Philip Hamilton in the duel which (using Church's pistols)
cost Philip Hamilton his life.

Philip Hamilton, with a friend at the theatre, insulted
an enemy of his fathers, a man named George Eacker, and subsequently refused to apologize. He apparently consulted Philip Church and a friend of his, D. S. Jones, before the challenge was issued. Whether he took their advice or decided on his own in spite of other counsel, he went ahead with the duel. It has been said that John Church also tried in vain to dissuade him. According to one source, John Church also approached Eacker to try to get him to with-the Genesis come there as ag

to become the te became the buil

The road
and figurative

Until th seems, for a
this trip h

Turne
life soon
now settl whether in life"
was act

draw the use of the word "rascal" which Eacker had used about Philip Hamilton. Eacker would have none of this. He said that he thought "it was appropriate when he used it because of young Hamilton's conduct," and, he told Church "I think so still."

However, Church was not so opposed to duelling as to refuse to lend his pistols. The pistols were to be used once more in the Burr-Hamilton duel.

The death of young Philip Hamilton about whom Angelica had written:

"Philip inherits his father's talents. What flattering prospects for a mother. You are, my dear sister, very happy with such a husband and such promise in a son."

had such a marked effect on Hamilton, whose hopes were centered in this son, that he seemed a changed man, losing the youthful quality that had always seemed a part of him. Three years later Hamilton himself died from the duel with Burr in the same spot, using the hair-trigger pistols.

By then Philip Church was starting the settlement on [unclear] part of the Morris Reserve. He had [unclear] now owned what was [unclear] flattering prospects for a mother. You are, my dear sister, very happy with such a husband and such promise in a son."

had such a marked effect on Hamilton, whose hopes were centered in this son, that he seemed a changed man, losing the youthful quality that had always seemed a part of him. Three years later Hamilton himself died from the duel with Burr in the same spot, using the hair-trigger pistols.

By then Philip Church was starting the settlement on the Genesee that had been part of the Morris Reserve. He had come there as agent for his father, who now owned what was to become the town of Angelica, and it was he then who became the builder of the town, and its first resident squire.

The road that brought him there was almost literally and figuratively being opened for the first time.

Until the trip to the Genesee country, Philip Church seems, for all we do know about him, a shadowy figure. With this trip he begins to appear as a person.

Turner describes him as "changing his destination in life soon after his majority and becoming the patron of the new settlement in the wilderness." It is not clear, however, whether or not it was his choice to "change his destination in life" or whether when his father called he answered. He was acting as agent for his father certainly.

At any rate, he went to the Genesee country in 1800 to bid on the land on the Morris Reserve in what is now Allegany County, for his father. Turner tells us that on his return from this trip he visited a club with John Church. It is otherwise unidentified, but the members present were all prominent New Yorkers: Brockholst Livingston, Richard Varick (at one time Mayor of New York City), Messers Bayard and Leroy, Richard Harrison and Gouverneur Morris. Apparently the wretched condition of the Albany-New York road was remarked on,

"whereupon Philip with the confidence of his youth said that the road from Albany to Canandaigua, then on the edge of the wilderness, would soon be a better turnpike than the one from New York."

Turner reports

"he was pronounced beside himself by the club, and retiring he was chided by his father for offering so rash an opinion," employed a surveyor and local agent, was to become the salesman for the land. He brought with him three other men, and was to become Sheriff of the town of Almond. He is prominently in what may be the country's earliest, certainly the earliest, murder trial, that of Stephen Price.

After getting supplies at Canandaigua, as they met at Almond, the last way to their destination, there had only been there for only a couple of days by Moses Van Campen, one of the first settlers, and, as has been said, a veteran. He, as an Indian captive, had been used by the new settlers were to use. The Erie Railroad was to use later.

We are told that on the Erie River James Dyke who was living on the Pennsylvania border. Dyke had been in Almond later, but had chosen to live at better turnpike than the one from New York."

Turner reports

"he was pronounced beside himself by the club, and retiring he was chided by his father for offering so rash an opinion," which might suggest some paternal role playing.

Turner tells us that the survey and settlement of the 100,000 acre tract was then commenced under the general supervision of Philip Church. It has been pointed out, however, that before this could happen the area which was sold to Philip Church had already been surveyed at least once. Herbert Stoughton, in his article "A Goodly Heritage," tells us that as early as 1784 the state of New York had a Surveyor General, Simeon Dewitt, whose job it was to supervise the surveys of state lands before sale to settlers. Andrew Ellicott was his consulting surveyor. Both of them had served under Washington in the Revolution. Morris had had the tract surveyed. The man who was to later survey Philip Church's tract for sale purposes to settlers, Moses Van Campen, had served in the Revolution as a scout with General Sullivan, had grown up in Pennsylvania and knew the area from wartime. His pioneer connections were certainly valuable to Church, but they did not include the original surveys of the area.

by Mo... and, as an Indian
He, as an Indian
new settlers were to use.
Railroad was to use later.

We are told that on the James Dyke who was living so vania border. Dyke had been later Almond, but had chosen

Turner further descri constant rain and full st thorough exploration of t

Minard reports Phil incident where "he had camp. The rest of the bewildered on attempti

"He could hear t
occasionally so going in the w
top of his wa
no avail. Fir
the distance,
came spreadin
brought an a of loneliness
and with th returned."

which might suggest some paternal role playing.

Turner tells us that the survey and settlement of the 100,000 acre tract was then commenced under the general supervision of Philip Church. It has been pointed out, however, that before this could happen the area which was sold to Philip Church had already been surveyed at least once. Herbert Stoughton, in his article "A Goodly Heritage," tells us that as early as 1784 the state of New York had a Surveyor General, Simeon Dewitt, whose job it was to supervise the surveys of state lands before sale to settlers. Andrew Ellicott was his consulting surveyor. Both of them had served under Washington in the Revolution. Morris had had the tract surveyed. The man who was to later survey Philip Church's tract for sale purposes to settlers, Moses Van Campen, had served in the Revolution as a scout with General Sullivan, had grown up in Pennsylvania and knew the area from wartime. His pioneer connections were certainly valuable to Church, but they did not include the original surveys of the area.

In July of 1801 Philip Church returned to the Genesee country by way of Geneva and Lyons, New York. Here he

James
vania born
later Almond, ...

Turner further describes constant rain and full stream thorough exploration of the Minard reports Philip incident where "he had cut camp. The rest of the party bewildered on attempting

"He could hear the occasionally sound going in the wrong top of his voice no avail. Finally the distance, a came spreading brought an awful of loneliness and with the returned."

employed a surveyor and local agent, Evert Van Wickle, who was to become the salesman for the new settlement. Van Wickle brought with him three other men, John Gibson, who was later to become Sheriff of the town of Angelica and to figure prominently in what may be the county's most notorious, certainly the earliest, murder trial; one John Lewis, and Stephen Price.

After getting supplies at Geneva and Bath, Turner tells us they met at Almond, the last settlement on their way to their destination, then a cluster of cabins which had been there for only a couple of years. Here they were joined by Moses Van Campen, one of the original settlers of Almond, and, as has been said, a veteran of Sullivan's Expedition. He, as an Indian captive, had followed the same trails these new settlers were to use. It was the same route the Erie Railroad was to use later.

We are told that on the way they came to the house of James Dyke who was living south of there near the Pennsylvania border. Dyke had been the first white man in what was later Almond, but had chosen to settle south of there.

Turner further describes the trip saying that despite constant rain and full streams the party made "a pretty
of the tract." of one

see section
McDonald was to use later.

We are told that on the way they came to the house of James Dyke who was living south of there near the Pennsylvania border. Dyke had been the first white man in what was later Almond, but had chosen to settle south of there.

Turner further describes the trip saying that despite constant rain and full streams the party made "a pretty thorough exploration of the tract."

Edward reports Philip Church was fond of telling of one incident where "he had cut his foot and was confined to the camp. The rest of the party after being out all day became bewildered on attempting their return."

"He could hear their shouts from afar, which occasionally sounding indicated that they were going in the wrong direction. He shouted at the top of his voice to get their attention, but to no avail. Finally their shoutings died away in the distance, and as the sombre shades of evening came spreading over the grand old woods, they brought an awful, almost intolerable sensation of loneliness. The night at length wore away and with the arrival of morning the lost party returned."

Turner further observes that:

"With Judge Church it was a youthful advent-- a first introduction to the woods--and a pretty rugged specimen he encountered, as all will acknowledge who have traversed the alternating hills and valleys of Allegany. Arriving at the North-West corner of the tract, the party mostly returned to their homes; Church and Van Campen making up their minds for a pleasure trip, taking an Indian trail that bore in the direction of Niagara Falls."

This trail, which Church and Van Campen followed for two days went over the summit that divides the waters of the Genesee from those of Lake Erie, went into the valley of the Cattaraugus, then into the valley of the west branch of Buffalo Creek and followed the course of that creek to the Seneca Indian village at its junction with the main stream, four miles from its mouth.

... (later

four miles

They got to the settlement of New Amsterdam (later Buffalo, New York) says Turner, in "a sorry plight; with torn clothes, beards unshaven, tanned and camp smoked," (this last an apt description).

They visited Niagara Falls and took the "white man's trail back to Bath."

Since the whole trip was done on impulse, with no previous planning, or additional provisions, they found on the way home they had used up money and supplies, except for some chocolate which they bartered for meals at Ganson's (now Leroy, New York) Militia Training Site. Church was able to borrow money from an officer, Richard W. Stoddard.

Certainly Philip Church must have on this trip, heard Van Campen's stories about the Wyoming Massacre at Forty Fort, his tales of the famous gauntlet run at Caneadea and the methods of warfare used by both the Indians and Sullivan. This was a far cry from being an aide-de-camp to Washington, or studying at Eton, or the concerns of finance or social life in New York or Philadelphia.

On the way back we are told they went to Geneseo where they visited James Wadsworth, he whom the little Trumbull girl had described as in trouble from duelling. John Trumbull also later visited the Wadsworths and in 1806 invested in land there. Wadsworth had been sent by his Uncle Jeremiah to settle the land at Geneseo in much the same manner that Philip Church had been pressed into service by his father. Of James it is said in the History Of The Phelps And Gorham Purchase:

"His kinsman, Colonel Jeremiah Wadsworth proposed to him emigration to the Genesee country, the sale to him of a part of his tract at 'Big Tree' upon advantageous terms, and an agency that would embrace the care and sale of his remaining lands. After consulting with his brother William, making it a condition of the proposed emigration that he should accompany him, the two brothers agreed jointly to accept the proposition."

Both Jeremiah Wadsworth and John Barker Church expected to make profits from their real estate. A biographer of the Underwoods comments that "the rich men of the cities bought anger was kindled against saw in the wilderness the bloom there, but which still more so to his Lo Dunlap said, as I sat

a bear, as if to take

Philip Church's
half of the acreage settlement. His re Henry Clune tells excellent at other led a sheltered, if as seen by the Van satin knee breech
his expensive lin
vigorously shakin
garment and pick loving it!

The "Little
Paris as in pe learning a new

making it a condition of the proposed emigration, that he should accompany him, the two brothers agreed jointly to accept the proposition."

Both Jeremiah Wadsworth and John Barker Church expected to make profits from their real estate. A biographer of the Wadsworths comments that "the rich men of the cities bought huge tracts of forest that they never saw, and sold them at a fat profit to eager homesteaders." Certainly in this respect the Wadsworths were more successful than the Churches, and yet by 1817 James Wadsworth was worrying about settlers for their lands . . . "Twenty good families will, by their connections soon fill us a township and by still holding on to about one fourth of your lands, you will be able to sell for the price of cleared lands."

One failure of the Wadsworth purchases was the case of Raphael West. According to R. C. Albert's book about Benjamin West, West had bought 25,000 acres of land from the Wadsworths, and Raphael and his bride were to go there in 1800 and settle permanently on the tract. According to Alberts, Dunlap, a friend of theirs, wrote:

"Of all creatures, my friend Raphael was the least fitted for the task of a pioneer in America."

And although young West did sketches during his stay at Big Tree, Dunlap noted that the venture was a fiasco. The Wests got out of real estate, continues Alberts. His [Raphael's]

as satin kn
his expensive vigorously shaking wood garment and picking wood ticks from his loving it!

The "Little Phil" described by Paris as in pension--jabbering "sore learning a new language, that of the

A later tale of Major (Richard) trial of skill with Van Campen and relationship of the two men and a Church's prowess.

"It was a 'general tr fastening a little piece o with a pin, paced off a r turning, took deliberate the pin into the tree, t Handing the gun to the c beat it, which was, of gun, however, was taken upon examination no ne discovered. It was c did not hit the tree. s ed by chopping that both ball

next year about h defin
of Ange
Van

anger was kindled against Wadsworth, who like a true American saw in the wilderness the paradise which was to grow up and bloom there, but which was invisible to the London painter, still more so to his London wife. "Would you believe it," Dunlap said, as I sat drawing by a lower window, up marched a bear, as if to take a lesson."

Philip Church's reward for his stewardship would be one half of the acreage if the property were prepared for sale and settlement. His rewards were not all anticipated, however. Henry Clune tells us that he was "a good cricketeer and excellent at other sports pursued by gentlemen," but he had led a sheltered, if worldly existence. Clune describes him as seen by the Van Campen family at one point discarding his satin knee breeches, his broadcloth coat, his varnished pumps, his expensive linen, and seen in the Van Campen cow lot, vigorously shaking wood lice from his rough frontiersman's garment and picking wood ticks from his flesh--and apparently loving it!

The "Little Phil" described by his father in 1784 in Paris as in pension--jabbering "more French than English" was learning a new language, that of the western New York frontier.

A later tale of Major (Richard) Church's tells of a Campen and shows something of the something of Philip

The "Little Phil" described by his father in 1784 in Paris as in pension--jabbering "more French than English" was learning a new language, that of the western New York frontier.

A later tale of Major (Richard) Church's tells of a trial of skill with Van Campen and shows something of the relationship of the two men and also something of Philip Church's prowess.

"It was a 'general training' when a man, fastening a little piece of white paper on a tree with a pin, paced off a reasonable distance, and turning, took deliberate aim and fired, driving the pin into the tree, the paper still adhering. Handing the gun to the other, he requested him to beat it, which was, of course, impossible. The gun, however, was taken, loaded and fired, when upon examination no new ball hole could be discovered. It was claimed by some that Church did not hit the tree. The controversy was settled by chopping into the tree, when it was found that both balls had entered the same hole."

Within the next year, Church had done a number of definite things about his land. He had designated the site of Angelica, hired Van Wickle to commence surveying and

A. N. Cole in the Allegany County History paints a picture of the Church tract that suggests settlers had to be hardy indeed to want to stay there. The tract, he says,

"covered all over with tall pines, spreading beeches, elms which bowed, and maples, casting down shadows on countless hill tops and along numberless valleys was, if early history is to be relied on, so cold and cheerless in its desolation that the wolves starved for the want of sheep to live on, while the sheep could not eat the grass on account of the frosts and snows forbidding it to grow; the catamount lived on the coon and the coon in turn subsisted by annual migrations to the cornfields in the delta below.

The course of the romance-shrouded Genesee, where then the bark canoe of the Iroquois brave skimmed the glassy surface and the twang of his bowstring broke the morning stillness, followed by the death-cry of the wounded bittern, or the crashing of the underbrush, beneath the plunging of the stricken deer, is all gravely altered by the mutation of a hundred years of prosaic and mechanical civilizing growth. All was forest, bristling with tremendous pines, and silvered here and there with sparkling lakelets and winding streams, where fish leaped to the baited thorn-hooks of the Indian anglers, and the lumbering exwains of the white invader had just begun to deposit scattered settlers here and there."

Orasmus Turner had a more jaundiced view. In 1850 he remarked rather sourly that "We know of no reason for the tardy progress of settlement on Mr. Church's tract, as the proprietor located himself on the premises in 1804 and expended large sums of money to give it its primary impetus, unless it was that Mr. Church, who was educated in Europe and had associated with its Aristocracy, was better qualified to support the high character of his hospitable mansion, overflowing with the substantial, and well stored with all the delicacies and luxuries produced in or imported to this region; than to mete out the hills and dales of the earth by acre, to the huge framed axe-man, and long-limbed Bill Purdys of the exploring pioneers. Judge Church resides two and half miles southwest of the village of Angelica, the county town of Allegany County, at his beautiful country seat Belvidere, on the banks of the Genesee River."

By 1803 the road from Angelica to Belvidere was opened. There was a tavern run by Joseph the substantial, and well... the delicacies and luxuries produced in or imported to this region; than to mete out the hills and dales of the earth by acre, to the huge framed axe-man, and long-limbed Bill Purdys of the exploring pioneers. Judge Church resides two and half miles southwest of the village of Angelica, the county town of Allegany County, at his beautiful country seat Belvidere, on the banks of the Genesee River."

By 1803 the road from Angelica to Belvidere was opened. The grist mill was going. There was a tavern run by Joseph Taylor, Van Wickle's house, a land office and several shanties. A store was opened by John Gibson. That same year the White House, Philip Church's own frame house, later to be superseded by the brick and stone mansion of Belvidere, was started.

Interestingly enough, Moses Van Campen's survey for the Churches to establish property boundaries, did not start until 1810 when Van Campen noted:

"September 7, 1810--On this instant, commenced surveying the land belonging to John Barker Church, Esquire, situated in the county of Allegany, state of New York. Beginning at a pine stake standing on the transit, and marked on the south side with the letters of John B. Church."

View of the Public Buildings at Angelica.

Chapter 17

The Squire and His Town

Where John Barker Church's rise to power in life seems to have usually been acquiring money and spending it lavishly, his son seems to have concentrated on being the guiding influence of the town he created--in other words the Squire. From 1802 - 1805 he was acting in many ways as agent for his father, John Barker Church, and both he and VanWickle kept records of their transactions as agents, both in sales of land and expenditures. After that it is plainly Philip's concern for "his" town. To that end, he involved himself in a number of projects that were farther reaching than the boundaries of Angelica.

However, the town itself, its layout, its appearance, and its prosperity were all his concern, almost from the moment he acquired the land.

... people to assist him. One ... tale of ...influence of from 1802 - 1805 he was acting

...ber, John Barker Church, and both he and VanWickle kept records of their transactions as agents, both in sales of land and expenditures. After that it is plainly Philip's concern for "his" town. To that end, he involved himself in a number of projects that were farther reaching than the boundaries of Angelica.

However, the town itself, its layout, its appearance, and its prosperity were all his concern, almost from the moment he acquired the land.

In this he had some unusual people to assist him. One of them was Evert VanWickle. There is an apocryphal tale of Evert VanWickle and the layout of Angelica in an old article on "Forgotten Mills" (these being the Philipsburg mills in what is now Belmont, NY. In this article the author says:

"It is of interest here to recall the manner in which the settlement of Allegany County began. The advance agent of the land company that obtained possession of this region, and was about to induce settlers to take up their abode here, was Evert VanWickle. He had entered the tract with a heavy wain drawn by six oxen, and when crossing the site occupied by the present village of Angelica, his wagon broke down. Looking about him to ascertain his whereabouts, he found himself nearly in the center of the land he had come to sell, and concluded that it was a good place to stop. So he took up his abode at that point, and that was the beginning of Angelica, and likewise Allegany County."

Alan Stone, the historian of the town of Angelica, has pointed out that the physical layout of the town follows the precepts of Plato and in proof he quotes from Book V of Plato's Laws as translated by Benjamin Jowell. Stone credits this foresight to the agent, VanWickle.

"How can we rightfully order the distribution of the land? The number of citizens has to be determined, also the number and size of the divisions into which they will be formed. The land and the houses will have to be apportioned fairly. The territory must be sufficient to maintain a certain number of inhabitants in a moderate way of life; more than this is not required. After having taken a survey of this be easily imagined and described divide the city into twelve portions founding temples to Hestia, to in a spot we will call the acropolis with a circular wall. We will of the entire city and country point. The twelve portions shall be the provision that those of smaller and those of poorer Every allotment shall be con one of land near the city, distant."

There is one ironical note Greeks that the earth is a goddess possessors of the land are both subjects of the goddess, he cov away country centuries later t by its first inhabitants as be the Gods whose land it was, a made plans for his new town, realized the extent of their have that vision about the l

At any rate, about th town, by the 1860's were te and Athene in a spot we sh another deity.

take up their abode here, was Evert VanWickle. He had entered the tract with a heavy wain drawn by six oxen, and when crossing the site occupied by the present village of Angelica, his wagon broke down. Looking about him to ascertain his whereabouts, he found himself nearly in the center of the land he had come to sell, and concluded that it was a good place to stop. So he took up his abode at that point, and that was the beginning of Angelica, and likewise Allegany County."

Alan Stone, the historian of the town of Angelica, has pointed out that the physical layout of the town follows the precepts of Plato and in proof he quotes from Book V of Plato's Laws as translated by Benjamin Jowell. Stone credits this foresight to the agent, VanWickle.

"How can we rightfully order the distribution of the land? The number of citizens has to be determined, also the number and size of the divisions into which they will be formed. The land and the houses will have to be apportioned fairly. The territory must be sufficient to maintain a certain number of inhabitants in a moderate way of life; more than this is not required. After having taken a survey of this and the surrounding territory we will determine be easily imagined and described. divide the city into twelve portions, founding temples to Hestia, to Athena, and to the other gods. We will call the acropolis in a spot we will call the acropolis with a circular wall. We will divide the entire city and country into twelve portions. The twelve portions shall be the provision that those of the smaller and those of poorer land. Every allotment shall be complete. One of land near the city, the other distant."

There is one ironical note in the story of the Greeks that the earth is a goddess and the possessors of the land are both her subjects and her children. In the early days of the country centuries later than the time of the first inhabitants as believed by the Gods whose land it was, and the founders of the new town, they made plans for his new town, they realized the extent of their land and have that vision about the land.

At any rate, about the year 1860, by the 1860's were temples and Athene in a spot we shall call another deity.

precepts of Plato and in proof he quotes from Book V of Plato's Laws as translated by Benjamin Jowell. Stone credits this foresight to the agent, VanWickle.

"How can we rightfully order the distribution of the land? The number of citizens has to be determined, also the number and size of the divisions into which they will be formed. The land and the houses will have to be apportioned fairly. The territory must be sufficient to maintain a certain number of inhabitants in a moderate way of life; more than this is not required. After having taken a survey of this and the surrounding territory we will determine limits in fact as well as in theory. Let the citizens at once distribute their land and houses and not till the land in common, since a community of goods goes beyond their origin, nurture and education. But in making the distribution, let the several possessors feel that their particular lots also belong to the whole city and let them, seeing that the earth is their parent, tend their mother, for the earth is a goddess and a queen and they are her mortal subjects.

The next thing to be noted is that the city should be placed as nearly as possible in the center of the country; we should choose a place which is suitable for a city and this may

Creeks L Possessors of the subjects of the
away country centurion
by its first inhabitants the Gods whose land it was, and made plans for his new town, the realized the extent of their lo have that vision about the land

At any rate, about the town, by the 1860's were temp and Athene in a spot we shall another deity.

In four lots facing i Paul's, whose services bega erected in 1827; the count in 1810; the Presbyterian Church in 1830, according
The History Of The Church
Church "had also deeded t of land, the proceeds of

If these dates are Churches, Madame D'Autr
exiled form 1810 knowin

be easily imagined and described. Then we will divide the city into twelve portions, first founding temples to Hestia, to Zeus, and to Athene in a spot we will call the acropolis and surround with a circular wall. We will make the divisions of the entire city and country radiate from this point. The twelve portions shall be equalized by the provision that those of the best land shall be smaller and those of poorer land shall be larger. Every allotment shall be composed of two sections, one of land near the city, the other of land more distant."

There is one ironical note here--when Plato reminds the Greeks that the earth is a goddess and a queen and that the possessors of the land are both the children and the mortal subjects of the goddess, he could not know that in this far away country centuries later the land had also been regarded by its first inhabitants as being theirs to use in trust for the Gods whose land it was, and that even as Philip Church made plans for his new town, the Iroquois still had not quite realized the extent of their loss. Nor did the newcomers have that vision about the land they were acquiring.

... about the park, the focal point of the ... not "to Hestia and Zeus ... acropolis" but to the edits

...books that
...possessors of the land, he could not know that in this
...subjects of the goddess, he could not know that in this ...country centuries later the land had also been regarded
...its first inhabitants as being theirs to use in trust for ...the Gods whose land it was, and that even as Philip Church
...made plans for his new town, the Iroquois still had not quite
...realized the extent of their loss. Nor did the newcomers
...have that vision about the land they were acquiring.

At any rate, about the park, the focal point of the town, by the 1860's were temples, not "to Hestia and Zeus and Athene in a spot we shall call the Acropolis" but to another deity.

In four lots facing it were the four churches: St.
Paul's, whose services began in 1821 and whose church was erected in 1827; the county mission of the Roman Catholics in 1810; the Presbyterian Church in 1812; and the Methodist Church in 1830, according to Mrs. Thornton in her essay on The History Of The Church Mansion. According to her, Philip Church "had also deeded to each of these churches 200 acres of land, the proceeds of which were to go to their maintenance."

If these dates are correct, the French neighbor of the Churches, Madame D'Autremont's sister, Mile. D'Ohet, the exiled former nun, might have felt easier at her death in 1810 knowing that there was soon to be a Catholic Church in Angelica. That there was no church there when she came was the final blow in her hopes for tranquility in a new world of uncompleted homesteads, primitive living conditions and strangers whom she did not understand.

In 1805 Philip Church had also given land for the cemetery to the town, Mlle. D'Ohet and her sister rest in the early section of the cemetery, sharing a marker for the graves.

Park Circle itself was given by Philip and Anna Mathilda Church to the town "to be used for no other purpose whatsoever than as a public place for the inhabitants of the town and village of Angelica."

On summer evenings in the twentieth century, the green, tree-shaded circle is the site of an activity singular to Angelica--a form of croquet called Rogue, taken seriously by its competitors.

It is interesting to note that not Plato, but the Northwest Ordinance of 1785 passed by the Continental Congress and adopted by Robert Morris for land holdings, called for the saving of a lot for the school house in the center of town (marked by numbers 15-16-21-22) of which lot #16 was to be reserved for the school. The Angelica Central School stands on Lot #16.

market was gutted; however the town seemed in an orderly manner, if not quite as rapidly as by its proprietors. But by 1807 there were the title of the property and John Barker himself in an embarrassing position financially where according to one writer, the valid title twelve years later was a matter for panic moved away.

However, the first years seemed to live up to the plans of its founder. The size of the town was controlled; necessary things like a sawmill and a store were to be established. The town would be back down the Susquehanna to the river. The sawmill was established in 1806, 1807.

In 1803 there were thirty-four families in Angelica. In 1804 some of them seem to have been in VanWickle's books. The agent had the store established. VanWickle built a frame house west of Bath. This is now occupied.

Things did not always go as planned, however. Madame D'Autremont, the wife of Philip Church's, wrote in 1806 to her son trying to describe why their house was not finished.

to have cost $4.

Angelica. That there was no church there when she came was the final blow in her hopes for tranquility in a new world of uncompleted homesteads, primitive living conditions and strangers whom she did not understand.

In 1805 Philip Church had also given land for the cemetery to the town, Mlle. D'Ohet and her sister rest in the early section of the cemetery, sharing a marker for the graves.

Park Circle itself was given by Philip and Anna Matilda Church to the town "to be used for no other purpose whatsoever than as a public place for the inhabitants of the town and village of Angelica."

On summer evenings in the twentieth century, the green, tree-shaded circle is the site of an activity singular to Angelica--a form of croquet called Rogue, taken seriously by its competitors.

It is interesting to note that not Plato, but the Northwest Ordinance of 1785 passed by the Continental Congress and adopted by Robert Morris for land holdings, called for the saving of a lot for the school house in the center of town (marked by numbers 15-16-21-22) of which lot #16 was to be reserved for the school. The Angelica Central School stands on Lot #16.

market was gutted; however the town seemed in an orderly manner, if not quite as rapidly as planned by its proprietors. But by 1807 there were some questions about the title of the property and John Barker himself in an embarrassing position financially. According to one writer, the validity of the title twelve years later was a matter for people to be moved away.

However, the first years seemed to have gone to the plans of its founder. The size of the town was controlled; necessary things like a sawmill and a store were to be established. The sawmill would be back down the Susquehanna to the town. The sawmill was established in 1806, the

In 1803 there were thirty-four families in the town. In 1804 some of them seem to have been to VanWickle's books. The agent had the store established. VanWickle had a frame house west of Bath. This is now occupied.

Things did not always go as planned however. Madame D'Austrament, the first wife of Philip Church, wrote in 1806 to her son, trying to describe why their house was not finished.

On summer evenings in the twentieth century, the green, tree-shaded circle is the site of an activity singular to Angelica—a form of croquet called Rogue, taken seriously by its competitors.

It is interesting to note that not Plato, but the Northwest Ordinance of 1785 passed by the Continental Congress and adopted by Robert Morris for land holdings, called for the saving of a lot for the school house in the center of town (marked by numbers 15-16-21-22) of which lot #16 was to be reserved for the school. The Angelica Central School stands on Lot #16.

The village whose site Evert VanWickle was to establish in 1802 from the survey stakes found in 1801 by Philip Church and whose settlement he was to start, was named Angelica, for Philip Church's mother. Within the town surveying was started for purposes of purchase. Stipulations were set up for purchasers resembling modern zoning requirements, a rather amazing exception to most small villages of this time.

Unlike Wadsworth's fertile territory to the north, Church was founding a town in a much less productive region where, despite the rivers, there was not particularly easy access to markets. Those people who were looking for a place to settle had modest ideas of what they needed. Those people who were buying on speculation found all too soon, that the would

The sawmill
In 1803 there were in 1804 some of them seem to have to VanWickle's books. The agent had built the store established. VanWickle built frame house west of Bath. This is still occupied.

Things did not always go as they however. Madame D'Autremont, the Pre Churches' wrote in 1806 to her son, L trying to describe why their house of finished.

"Boards have cost $4.00
feet, at Butternuts [their pr $5.00 . . . Mr. Church who h refuses to sell any. There twenty to twenty-five miles bad roads."

Whether this was due to personal families or . . . a problem for o but in 1807 . . . writing Loui

"Or . . . laborers because she came was a new world conditions and for the er rest in the

for the

Anna Mathilda
lose whatso-
of the town

y, the green, angular to seriously by ut the ntal

ldings, se in the which gelica

market was gutted; however the town seemed to progress in an orderly manner, if not quite as rapidly as it had been hoped for by its proprietors. But by 1807 there were questions about the title of the property and John Barker Church was to find himself in an embarrassing position financially to the point where according to one writer, the validity of the law titles twelve years later was a matter for panic, and many settlers moved away.

However, the first years seemed to be going according to the plans of its founder. The size of lots was to be controlled; necessary things like a sawmill, a grist mill, and a store were to be established. The market for products would be back down the Susquehanna to places like Baltimore. The sawmill was established in 1806, the grist mill in 1808.

In 1803 there were thirty-four land transactions, but in 1804 some of them seem to have been bought back according to VanWickle's books. The agent had built a land office, and the store established. VanWickle built for himself the first frame house west of Bath. This is still standing and is still occupied.

Things did not always go as they had been planned for, however. Madame D'Autremont, the French neighbor of the Churches' wrote in 1806 to her son, Louis Paul, in Paris, in trying to describe why their house of squared lumber was not

and Anna Mathilda
purpose whatso-ants of the town

entury, the green,
y singular to ken seriously by co, but the tinent

d holdings,
house in the
of which
be Angelica

was to in 1801 by start, was within the town Stipulations
oning required villages of the north,

active region
ularly easy
ng for a place
These people
on, that the

In 1803 there were thirty-four land transactions, but in 1804 some of them seem to have been bought back according to VanWickle's books. The agent had built a land office, and the store established. VanWickle built for himself the first stone house west of Bath. This is still standing and is still occupied.

Things did not always go as they had been planned for, however. Madame D'Autremont, the French neighbor of the Churches' wrote in 1806 to her son, Louis Paul, in Paris, in trying to describe why their house of squared lumber was not finished.

"Boards have cost $4.00 per thousand square feet, at Butternuts [their previous settlement] $5.00 . . . Mr. Church who has the sawing mill refuses to sell any. There are sawing mills at twenty to twenty-five miles from here, but what bad roads."

Whether this was due to personal clashes between the two families or was a problem for other people, we do not know, but in 1807 she was writing Louis Paul:

"One cannot find laborers as one wishes and they cost a good deal because they are going to build a turnpike [the Lake Erie turnpike] and Mr. Church engaged all those he can lay his hands on. He pays them $16 per month and feeds them."

Apparently plans for a bridge crossing the Genesee River, with the east abutment of the bridge on Church's Belvidere farm land had to be abandoned. The bridge was to have been a toll bridge. This would require an act of the Legislature and none was forthcoming.

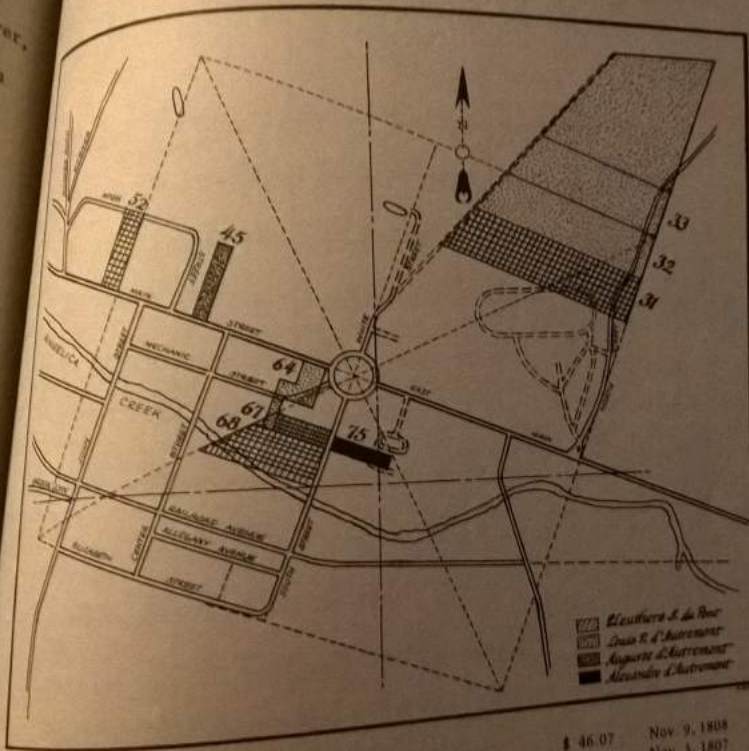

On the basis of the fact that the area reserved for the bridge was next to a lot which the D'Autremonts were considering, they bought it. This also may have been a sensitive subject for a number of years.

Angelica

Genesee River,
Belvidere
to have been a legislature

rved for the ere consider-
nsitive

Liber A - page 116

14.90 acre
13.22 acre

$ 46.07
$ 39.66
$200.00

Nov. 9, 1808
Nov. 3, 1807
Oct. 28, 1807 (1)
4, 1807

...enease River,
Balvidere
... have been a
...egialature

...rved for the
...re consider-
...nsitive

Angelica

#31 Fleuthre I. duPont	14.90 acre	$ 46.87	Nov. 9, 1888
Liber A - page 116	13.22 acre	$ 39.66	Nov. 3, 1887
Liber A - page 62	14.48 acre	$200.00	Oct. 28, 1887 (1)
		$ 54.00	Nov. 4, 1887
			Nov. 1888 (2)

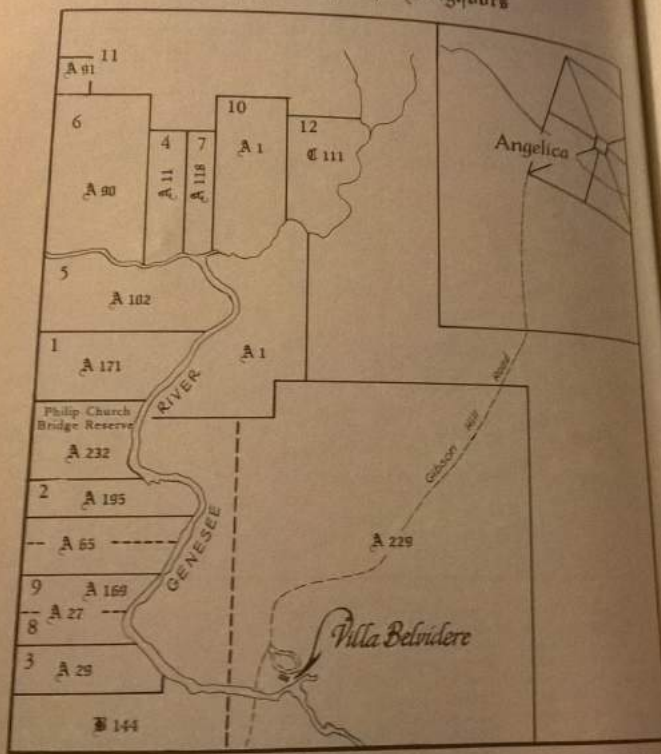

#31	Eleuthre I. duPont	Liber A - page 116	14.90 acre	$ 46.07	Nov. 9, 1808
#32	Louis P. d'Autremont	Liber A - page 62	13.22 acre	$ 39.66	Nov. 3, 1807
#33	Louis P. d'Autremont	Liber A - page 57	14.48 acre	$200.00	Oct. 28, 1807 (1)
	Louis P. d'Autremont	Liber A - page 60	27.00 acre	$ 34.00	Nov. 4, 1807
#45	Auguste d'Autremont	Liber A - page 137	1.85 acre	$ 74.00	Mar. 28, 1809 (2)
#52	Eleuthre I. duPont	Liber A - page 111	3.00 acre	$ 9.00	Aug. 18, 1808
#64	Louis P. d'Autremont	Liber A - page 54	1.97 acre	$700.00	Oct. 28, 1807 (3)
#67	Eleuthre I. duPont	Liber A - page 115	1.00 acre	$ 22.76	Nov. 17, 1808
#68	Eleuthre I. duPont	Liber A - page 175	7.00 acre	$756.67	June 7, 1809 (4)
#75	Alexandre d'Autremont	Liber B - page 279	1.00 acre	$157.83	May 15, 1817 (5)

 Eleuthere I. du Pont
 Louis P. d'Autremont
 Auguste d'Autremont
 Alexandre d'Autremont

#31	Eleuthre I. duPont	Liber A - page 116	14.90 acre	$ 46.07	Nov. 9, 1808
#32	Louis P. d'Autremont	Liber A - page 62	13.22 acre	$ 39.66	Nov. 3, 1807
#33	Louis P. d'Autremont	Liber A - page 57	14.48 acre	$200.00	Oct. 28, 1807 (1)
	Louis P. d'Autremont	Liber A - page 60	27.00 acre	$ 54.00	Nov. 4, 1807
#45	Auguste d'Autremont	Liber A - page 137	1.85 acre	$ 74.00	Mar. 28, 1809 (2)
#52	Eleuthre I. duPont	Liber A - page 111	3.00 acre	$ 9.00	Aug. 18, 1808
#64	Louis P. d'Autremont	Liber A - page 54	1.97 acre	$700.00	Oct. 28, 1807 (3)
#67	Eleuthre I. duPont	Liber A - page 115	1.00 acre	$ 22.76	Nov. 17, 1808
#68	Eleuthre I. duPont	Liber A - page 175	7.00 acre	$756.67	June 7, 1809 (4)
#75	Alexandre d'Autremont	Liber B - page 279	1.00 acre	$157.83	May 15, 1817 (5)

Philip Church's Neighbors

Number 1 - 12 indicate order in which lots were sold

Occupants of Numbered Lots

- A-232 Bridge Reserve - Philip Church
- A-65 Louis Paul D'Autremont (Alexander)
- A-195 Louis Paul D'Autremont (Alexander)
- A-169 Sylvanus Russell to Alexander B'Autremont
- A-171 Moses Van Campen
- A-29 Sylvanus Russell
- A-11 William Hayden
- A-102 John Ayers
- A-90 Evert Van Wickle
- A-118 E. J. DuPont de Nemours
- A-27 Sylvanus Russell
- A-1 Victor ...
- A-91 Evert ...
- C-111 W. Hyde
- B-144 William H...

Occupants of Numbered Lots

- A-232 Bridge Reserve - Philip Church
A-65 Louis Paul D'Autremont (Alexander)
A-195 Louis Paul D'Autremont (Alexander)
A-169 Sylvanus Russell to Alexander D'Autremont
A-171 Moses Van Campen
A-29 Sylvanus Russell
A-11 William Hayden
A-102 John Ayers
A-90 Evert Van Wickle
A-118 E. J. DuPont de Nemours
A-27 Sylvanus Russell
A-1 Victor DuPont
A-91 Evert Van Wickle
C-111 M. Hyde de Newville
B-144 William Higgins

Chapter 18

The Neighbors

As was true with other settlements of the time, there were a certain number of settlers drawn to Philip Church's new town for romantic reasons, and as there is often a vast difference between the romantic vision and reality, so indeed was it here.

One particular group whom John Barker Church had known through his connections with the Commissary Department, later in his stay in Paris, and still later in London, were the French aristocrats and upper middle class who were forced to flee France at the time of the Revolution. These often had Rousseau's romantic vision of the wilderness. Church persuaded some of them to settle in Angelica. Among them was Victor DuPont whom the Churches had also known in New York. (His stay was a relatively brief and unhappy one.) There are in the DuPont papers several references to Victor DuPont's dealings with John Barker Church before the trip to the Genesee. One relates to the ship Clarissa which apparently made a voyage to Santiago, Chile, with a cargo of 102 items in 1804. The note referring to this says that John Barker Church and Victor DuPont de Nemours and Company are listed as joint owners of the cargo.

DuPont brought with him to Angelica his wife, the daughter of a Marquis, who was outraged by the whole experience. She had lived in comfort in France and in the first days in this country when Victor was with the French Consular